A longtime Keeseville resident, Kessel founded several film companies including the New York Motion Picture Corporation (NYMPC: 1909), Keystone Studios, Bison Films, Reliance, Broncho, Kay-Bee and Domino Pictures. He was significantly responsible for the establishment of Hollywood. In 1912 Kessel sent his film director, Mack Sennett, to Southern California to make a series of silent films including Keystone Comedies and several Westerns. In 1913, Adam Kessel recruited and signed a contract with Charlie Chaplin, who at the time was on tour in the U.S. While working for Kessel, Sennett made 36 Keystone Comedy films starring Charlie Chaplin.
